This week I released my first site bought by City Hall for development - with 100% affordable housing.

Today I've launched "Better Health for all Londoners" - my strategy to reduce health inequalities across our city.

Mayor's Transport Strategy – consulting till early October

Transport has the potential to shape London, from the streets Londoners live, work and spend time on, to the Tube, rail and bus services they use every day.

By using the Healthy Streets Approach to prioritise human health and experience in planning the city, the Mayor wants to change London's transport mix so the city works better for everyone.

1. Healthy Streets and healthy people

Creating streets and street networks that encourage walking, cycling and public transport use will reduce car dependency and the health problems it creates.

2. A good public transport experience

Public transport is the most efficient way for people to travel over distances that are too long to walk or cycle, and a shift from private car to public transport could dramatically reduce the number of vehicles on London's streets.

3. New homes and jobs

More people than ever want to live and work in London. Planning the city around walking, cycling and public transport use will unlock growth in new areas and ensure that London grows in a way that benefits everyone

A few Mayor's Transport Strategy highlights

Healthy Streets Indicators

The transport principles of 'good growth'

- Good access to public transport
- High-density, mixed-use developments
- People choose to walk and cycle
- Car-free and car-lite places
- Inclusive, accessible design
- Carbon-free travel
- Efficient freight

Healthy Streets and healthy people

- London's streets will be healthy and more Londoners will travel actively
- London's transport system will be safe and secure
- London's streets will be used more efficiently and have less traffic on them
- London's streets will be clean and green

A good public transport experience

- More people will travel on an expanded public transport network
- Public transport will be affordable and accessible to all
- Journeys by public transport will be pleasant, fast and reliable

New homes and jobs

- Sustainable travel will be the best option in new developments
- Transport investment will unlock the delivery of new homes and jobs
